The Smell Of Success

Abdulla Ajmal, Deputy C.O.O. of Ajmal Perfumes talks about how the decades-old family business has survived and grown, and how it connects with customers to create memorable fragrances.

In over 60 years of business, how has Ajmal continued to grow and remain relevant amongst growing competition?

We have managed to stay relevant by changing according to the needs of our customers and the requirements of the market. Over the years we have evolved from being a commodity trader selling Oudh, Dahn Al Oudh and its multiple flavors and variants in a few select locations, to being a multi-brand and multiple category retailer with two dedicated manufacturing facilities in Dubai and over 240 company owned and operated outlets spread across eight countries and distributing to over 45 countries around the world.

We work with the best suppliers in the world. We have a knowledgeable and well-travelled competent team across our departments to ensure we work every day to keep ourselves ahead of the curve. It is important to understand that this is a continual process. Change is the only constant and change is what we must embrace to move forward.

What are the most profitable and active markets that you operate in?

All the markets that we currently operate in are profitable for us, but the U.A.E. and Saudi Arabia are number one and two in terms of turnover.

Who are your key demographics?

We cater to perfumer lovers across the six gulf countries, India and Thailand in terms of retail, with distribution taking us into countries like the U.S., the UK, Australia, Brazil, etc. We believe we have ability to cater to most perfume tastes, as we have over 300 fragrances in our stores. If you walk into our stores empty handed, chances are you will walk out with a fragrance suitable to your taste.

What do you hope to achieve in your time running the family business?

My mission is to bring Ajmal into households where we currently have no presence, so I want to expand the business into countries where Ajmal is not well known. The approach is two pronged through retail and through distribution. We have a vision to establish ourselves in key locations around the world in terms of retail.

We currently service eight countries in terms of retail, and we aim to expand that to include locations such as London, New York, Paris, Sao Paulo and Tokyo over the next few years. In terms of distribution, we aim to expand within the countries we are already present and to find new avenues to attract more customer to us. The goal is to make Ajmal a globally recognized brand.

How much of your current business relies on Oud and how do you source such a precious commodity?

Ajmal's developed as a brand with Oudh and Dahn Al Oudh—it has been our mainstay since our inception and we will continue to sell the product well into the future. Over the years we have diversified our product line to include French and western fragrance, both as concentrated perfume oil as well as sprays. We have created products for the body such as body lotions, talcum powders and body butters. We have expanded into ambience with rose water-based room fresheners along with the traditional incense that we sell, including Oudh, Oudh Moattar and Dakhoons. We moved from a purely traditional product retailer into a fragrance house, controlling the entire chain from manufacturing to the marketing and retailing of the product. The dependence on Oudh has reduced, but the value of its contribution has increased over the years.

The past few years have also seen the introduction of Oudh-based fragrances from internationally renowned brands and that has helped us to cater to a wider audience through our traditional offerings. It has been

Abdulla Ajmal,
Deputy C.O.O. of Ajmal Perfumes

an interesting transition through which we are able to represent the best the east has to offer.

To cater to our needs for the traditional Oudh product, we have our own plantation of over a million trees in our place of origin—Assam.

Has the Middle East market changed in terms of its fragrance preferences over the years? If so how, and what are the current trends?

Trends in perfumery are cyclical, and what was fashionable in the past is coming back to the fore with a slight twist of modernity. Consumers today are far more exposed and like to express themselves uniquely. Our customers prefer a touch of the orient in all of their fragrance choices. We cater to this need by creating products that we term as ethnic chic—products that are modern but still hold the magic of the east in the way that the fragrance unravels.

At the moment, oriental fragrances are all the rage, with Oudh, amber and rose taking center stage through product launches by the some of the most well-known and revered brands around the world. This is our domain and it helps throw additional light on the product segments that we have been retailing for decades.

What do you do to connect with and understand your consumers' needs?

We have a very healthy relationship with our customers. We conduct regular surveys with them to understand if we are in line with their current tastes, if there are any short comings or any new directions that they would like us to work on, etc. When we develop our fragrances, we go back them for feedback. This helps us bring to market products our consumers are on the lookout for.

Why do you think fragrance inspires such consumer loyalty?

Fragrances enable you to travel through time and visit various parts of your past life. There is a strong bond between memory and smell. If you connect with one fragrance at any point in your life, you will be able to relive that moment through the fragrance in the future.

What is your favorite fragrance and why?

My favorite fragrance is the next launch by Ajmal. For me it is important to live well with the fragrance and be comfortable with its salient features, like diffusion, longevity and acceptability. It also helps me get feedback from family and friends on how the fragrance develops over time. Currently it is a wonderful, luminous fragrance, coming soon.
